brings to you the novel of the decade

In 1917 a group of Russians are on an expedition into Turkey to locate the ruins of Noah's Ark. In a cave they find several clay stone tablets scrawled with unfamiliar writing. Many years later these tablets are discovered in the United States and believed to be written by the Devil. They tell of many mysteries that have plagued the Christianity world for centuries. A monastery, in the Transylvania Alps, has known of these tablets for centuries and have kept them a secret from all mankind. They believe the world is not ready for such a find. Such an explanation to biblical mysteries would cause chaos in all religions. The Russians have been aware of the stones for years, but have never been able to relocate the cave. The Russians are secretly notified of the expedition and send out an elite force of soldiers to intercept the American expedition and capture the stones. Frank Snowden discovers there is more in the hidden cave than he bargained for, such as the transcript from Rome by Pontius Pilate of the crucifix of Jesus, which reveals unknown facts of Jesus' trial. He realizes why the Russians want the contents of the cave so badly and knows one of the people in his group is a spy, helping the Russians follow them. Frank exposes the spy, holds off the Russians, and ultimately destroys the cave before it can fall into hands of people who will use its contents against the people of America. The answers to the age old mysteries of the bible will be lost forever.
